

Before you speak

Check you know

We usually use 'will' to predict the future.

In my lifetime, people will travel to Mars.

We also use conditionals to talk about future possibilities.

If people travelled to Mars, they could build a place for humans to live.

To show uncertainty, we often use modal verbs like may, might and could, and verbs like think, expect, guess and suppose.

I guess not many people would like to go and live on Mars, but I suppose one day this might be inevitable.

Speaking Topics: discuss these with your friends or study partners.

In our lifetime...

- ...will people lose interest in football?
- ...will everybody be slim without having to go on a diet?
- ...will people only cook for very special occasions?
- ...will people buy everything on the Internet?
- ...will anybody send letters by post?
- ...will drinking alcohol be illegal?
- ...will all businesses be open 24 hours a day?
- ...will we be able to design your children?
- ...will everybody live to at least 110?
- ...will women have most of the top jobs?

